CIVIC FEDERATION MEETING

The Thursday night, February 13, meeting of the Civic Federation promises to be an interesting session, and every member should be present. Citizens, not members, who are in sympathy with us, are cordially invited to attend and become members. With malice toward none we are striving to bring about a better condition of society, upbuild and beautify our town, and lend our aid to our officers in the discharge of their duties. You may have something to offer that will help us. Come and let us reason together—no politics—simply good citizenship is what we want. Everybody welcome that favors same.

G. W. WHITE, President.

Case Goes to Jury

(Concluded from First Page)

Sacramento. He denied that he had made arrangements with Smith to have his grip sent to Sacramento. Matt Skeen was called in rebuttal and denied that he had any conversation with the defendant at the barn about taking the horse. Dave Skeen, the next witness, testified to hearing a conversation at his house between Johnstone and Smith in which the former asked Smith to ship his grip to Sacramento. That he changed five dollars for him, and was given three of it for board and the other two were given to Smith. Court Reporter Richardson was examined as to certain evidence in the preliminary hearing and the case was closed.

Anonymous Communications

The Herald is always very careful of the truth of statements and reports before it is allowed to be printed, but in last evening's edition, what appeared to us as a very innocent looking account of a dance at J. B. Anten's home, was given. The item was sent us for publication but it appears that the account was entirely unfounded and is believed to have been given in spirit of malicious mischief. We would state if the identity of the party who sent in the article is obtained, they will be prosecuted.

I. O. O. F. Attention

There will be work in the Second Degree Saturday, February 15, and all members are requested to be present.

HUMOR OF THE HOUR

He Changed His Mind.
The customer looked like a man who had just had four aces beaten by a straight flush.
"Doc," he said hoarsely, "do you keep poison?"
"Yes, sir," promptly replied the druggist. "We have one of the most complete stocks of poison in the city."
"I want to die like a dog, doc," he went on. "What would you advise me to take?"
"Well, it's all a matter of taste, you know. Do you wish to leave this wicked world quickly and without much pain?"
"No, sir," he exclaimed fiercely. "I want to die in the greatest agony. I'll show her what it means to throw me down."
"Ah, I see," said the druggist. "A case of unrequited love."
"That's about the size of it, doc, and I want revenge. My plan is to fill up on poison and then go over on her front steps to die. I've a good pair of lungs in me, and when the stuff begins to work it will make her stand up to hear me take on. Can you fix me up, do you think?"
"I've just the thing for your case. It's a powerful drug and pleasant to take, but ten minutes later you will begin to suffer the tortures of the damned."
"That's what I want, doc."
"Your teeth will fall out one by one."
"Do they will?"
"Your tongue will turn black and swell so that it will slowly choke you to death."
"Will it?"
"Your bones will crumble and crack until your screams of agony can be heard a mile."
"Haven't you something else, doc, not quite so strong?"
"No; in this case there is nothing as good. Your groans toward the end will be terrible to hear. You will foam at the mouth. Your heart!"
"Say, doc," he broke in with a sickly smile, "I think a soda water will be about what I want."
"What flavor?" asked the druggist, keeping a straight face only by the greatest effort.
"Vanilla," was the meek reply.
And after one sip of the foaming beverage he hurried out of the store.—A. B. Lewis in Judge.
